

Muhammad ibn Abdullah ﷺ was the leader who raised men like diamonds. They were nurtured by the hands of the Master of mankind and became an undefeatable force in spreading the message of the Lord of the heavens.

They desired gold, but Umar desired good men (supporters)

Umar ibn al-Khattab, a prominent Muslim leader, expressed a desire for dedicated supporters of Islam rather than material wealth. He admired men like Abu Ubaidah ibn al-Jarrah, Muadh ibn Jabal, and Salim for their commitment and dedication to the faith. These men had been influenced by the teachings of the Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ) and were considered exemplary models of Muslim behavior.

In conclusion, if you truly come to know him, you will find in his path a light for your heart, in his law guidance for your mind, in his example tranquility for your life, and happiness at the time of your death.

The School of

MUHAMMAD

IBN ABDULLAH

Usama ibn Zaid: When a young man inherits the bravery of heroes

Usama ibn Zaid, a young Muslim warrior, participated in the Battles of the Trench and Mu'tah. Despite his young age, he displayed exceptional courage and determination. He continued to fight even after his father was martyred in battle, demonstrating his unwavering commitment to Islam.

The young leader in charge of the senior companions

The Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ) appointed Usama ibn Zaid, a young man of eighteen, to lead a group of senior companions in a military campaign. Despite objections from hypocrites, the Prophet defended Usama's leadership, highlighting his competence and the respect he held for him. This demonstrated that leadership is not solely based on age but rather on faith and ability.

Makers of Victory: Mothers in the School of Prophethood

The text highlights the role of mothers in nurturing future Muslim leaders. Women like Umm Sulaym bint Milhan, Safiyyah bint Abdul Muttalib, and Lubaba Al-Kubra raised renowned companions such as Anas ibn Malik, Zubair ibn Al-Awwam, and Ibn Mas'ud. These mothers instilled values of faith and striving for Allah in their children, shaping them into dedicated and committed individuals.

Young men under fifteen with hearts attached to the heavens

During the Battle of Uhud, the Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ) encountered a group of young Muslim boys who were eager to participate in the fight. Despite their enthusiasm, the Prophet sent them back due to their young age. These boys demonstrated courage, patience, and a deep commitment to their faith, reflecting the values instilled in them by their mothers.

